Nearly 17 years ago, when our firstborn son began riding those "plastic monsters" of Big Wheels up and down the sidewalks of Waterman. Later, joined by neighborhood friends, their "limit" was the "Big Bump" (a pushed up sidewalk caused by a mighty American elm) and this top sign for a school crossing at 6212-17 watermen. Daughter later joined this. As the "Big Wheels" died away, bikes came out but, just this summer (1999), there are again the noises of plastic wheels driven by determined children. I find I love the "noise" once again. And toddlers stomping with glee in the puddles our old sidewalks ensure. Neighbors chatting over fences! [The Big Bump on 6300 block south is] No longer there -- was fixed when sidewalks were redone. Ah, My!! It was common consensus that the clicker- clackers were cut off the wheels that was just too much!!

The 60's and 70's were never dull! At 6200 McPherson we had a ringside view of civil rights parades and demonstrations. A favorite place to hang out was along the stone wall in front of the Walshes' house on the corner of Skinker and McPherson. Sometimes as many as 20 of us were perched along the wall, and we had a ball doing nothing at all. Pajama parties were frequent at my house. One night we snuck out and did cartwheels in the street in our pajamas and Officer Barton caught us. He was our guardian angel. I could go on forever but space does not allow.

Many older residents that have given us interesting glimpses into our house's past and into the personality of its owners (previous 43 years)! Long-time residents have specifically welcomed our children, as they say "filling up the streets again." The City of St. Louis does very little to make our choice of the city of good one, but the "'hood" has made it all worthwhile.

The (apparently effortless) effort by Monsignor Peet to engage all residents and include them in the life of the parish, whether Catholic or not. His presence, warm and reassuring, throughout the neighborhood during more turbulent years, e.g. seeing him abroad on nighttime jaunts, stopping and chatting with residents. A familiar story: when moving here from Boston, I explained to the real estate agent they were looking for a house a) in the city, b) in an integrated neighborhood, c) near a university, d) with close access to public transportation. She kept taking us to Kirkwood. Found our house through a classified ad.

To me and my family, this is the greatest neighborhood that ever existed. It was a fun area and there was always something going on. The neighbors were loving and caring. When Bill had his heart attack, everyone seemed to come to our aid. This is typical as there were many crises in the area. When something great happened, all shared the joy. It was like a great big family. Bill and I and our children made wonderful lifetime friends there. St. Roch's picnic, the mom and dad's picnic, Mother's Day Art Fair and House Tours, Halloween, St. Patrick's dinner, neighborhood parties, the progressive dinner, etc., were all great events. St. Roch basement [Scariot Hall] was a special place. This was a gathering spot for meetings, special events and socials. St. Roch was a leading place in the neighborhood. Skinker DeBaliviere was like a small town within a city, offering the best of both. It had the intimacy of a small town., where everyone knew each other and all the advantages of a big city. This section of St. Louis housed the greatest people ever. We love the neighborhood and memories of it will always fill a part of my heart.
